

Summary

Let's summarize this chapter.

To sum up: `[[nodiscard]]` is an excellent addition to all the important code: public APIs, safety-critical systems, etc. Adding this attribute will at least enforce the code contract, and a compiler will help you detect bugs - at compile time, rather than finding in in the runtime.

Another useful feature at compile time is the `if constexpr`. We will deal with that next.