Conclusion

In this tutorial, we created a basic template that all future canvas-related content will follow. You have your `canvas` element in the HTML with some optional CSS and inline HTML attributes to help style it. You then have your JavaScript where you reference the `canvas` element, gain access to its rendering context, and then issue the draw commands needed to get pixels to appear.